DC NATION SPOTLIGHT ON GHOST-MAKER

This past year has seen a host of new characters introduced in the pages of Batman—from Punchline to Clownhunter, to the Designer and to Underbroker—and there's one more new antagonist set to debut before 2020 is up. First seen in Batman #100, Ghost-Maker is a new vigilante in Gotham—who also happens to be Bruce Wayne's rival from his teenage years.

Ghost-Maker was created by Batman writer James Tynion IV and superstar artist Jorge Jimenez, generating buzz at first glimpse due to his sleek and mysterious design. Before Ghost-Maker lays his claim to Gotham City starting in Batman #102, Tynion imparts some insight into the development of the character.

"The idea of giving Bruce a rival in his childhood goes back to when I was writing the backup stories to 'Zero Year,' thinking a lot about that era in Bruce's life. From time to time, I would think about where I might be able to introduce a character like that. Then I realized that I needed to bring in another character into the last story of 2020."

"Ghost-Maker needed to be a fascinating inverted mirror to Batman... And he needed some flair. And a name. And then Jorge Jimenez took all of that and worked some magic, putting together what I think is one of the absolute coolest new superhero designs I've seen in the last few years. We might even already have something we're building in secret with the character..."
